Subsites

Subsite overview

A Subsite contains two content types - a Subsite Overview and a Subsite Page, and lots of content components.

Most subsites will contain a single Subsite Overview, acting as the landing page for the subsite, and multiple Subsite Pages.

You will need to create the Overview before creating the Page, as the Parent field is required to Save the page.

Both the Subsite Overview and Subsite Page allow flexible layouts.

When to use a subsite

Subsites are useful if you're creating content that needs:

- to be more visual, with photos and videos
- a more flexible layout
- to market or promote a service

You can create a subsite landing page, with links through to connecting pages, as well as an image banner, photos and videos.

It is relatively easy to visually make the whole subsite look different to the rest of the site.

Page builder

Page builder allows you to build the content of the page in one, two or three column layouts.

When creating a new page, within the Page Builder tab click the plus (+) icon to add a new section. The Page section icon will allow you to choose your layout.

You can then choose components for each new column.

Banners

Out of the box two banner options are available:

- banner primary allows an image, title, text, logo and a URL
- banner secondary allows an image

The banners allow you to create a visual identity for the subsite - so you may want to consider keeping them visually like one another.

Subsite vs microsite

Subsites are sections within a larger website, sharing the same domain and navigation, while microsites are smaller, standalone websites (or subdomains) focused on a specific purpose or campaign, often with unique URLs and designs.

Subsite

Purpose: Organize and compartmentalize information within a larger website.

Structure: Part of a larger website, sharing the same domain, navigation, and branding.

Example: A blog section, a product catalogue, or an events page within a company website.

Benefits: Maintains a consistent user experience, simplifies navigation within a large site, and allows for focused content organization.

Considerations: Can become complex to manage as the number of subsites grows and may not be suitable for highly specialized or independent content.

Microsite

Purpose: Focus on a specific campaign, product, event, or topic, often with a unique URL and design.

Structure: Can be a subdomain or a separate website with its own domain.

Example: A landing page for a new product launch, a promotional website for a specific event, or a site dedicated to a particular product line.

Benefits: Allows for targeted messaging, experimentation with design and content, and can improve SEO for specific keywords.

Considerations: Can fragment a company's web presence, requires more maintenance and management, and may not be suitable for all types of content.

Subsite extras module

This module allows you to create menu-driven subsites in your LGD site.

This is an optional part of LGD, so please ask your developer to install it.

The menu defines the structure of the subsite, and also lets you use Drupal's standard menu blocks and tools to display the subsite's navigation and manage the hierarchy of the pages within it.
